The programme in short

The Matra Rule of Law Training Programme is designed to strengthen institutional capacity in the field of rule of law within government organisations in Albania, Armenia, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Georgia, Kosovo, Moldova, Montenegro, North Macedonia, Serbia, Türkiye, and Ukraine. We offer seven training programs each year, providing participants with insights into best practices across a wide range of rule of law topics.

Through interactive sessions that blend theory with practical skills, as well as study visits, our programme equips policy advisors, members of the judiciary and other civil servants working in the government and justice sectors with the knowledge and skills needed to drive reforms within their respective countries.

In addition, by taking part in the training programme, participants become part of a large international network of alumni, lecturers and public institutions in the Netherlands and in the target countries. This network serves as a platform for learning, exchange and collaboration.

The Matra Rule of Law Training Programme is designed and delivered by the Netherlands Helsinki Committee, Leiden Law School, and The Hague Academy for Local Governance. It is financed by the Ministry of Foreign Affairs of the Netherlands, and administered by the Netherlands Enterprise Agency (RVO) on behalf of the Ministry.

Target audience

The training on Democratic Institutions is intended for English-speaking civil servants holding (mid to senior level) positions in state bodies, charged with policy enabling an open government. Candidates should be reflecting on how government institutions can be designed to foster democratic politics that embody participation and social justice, thus increasing confidence in the government and decreasing the distance between the government and the citizens. They can come from national, regional and local government institutions.

Participants will be expected to offer an active contribution to the learning process and be in a position to implement the newly gained knowledge and insights in their respective organisation. The maximum number of participants per training is 30. The selection process will ensure gender balance and adequate representation of the countries concerned.

Background

Well-functioning institutions that guarantee democracy, the rule of law and human rights are essential for a democratic society. They are also one of the key pillars on which the EU's identity and values are based. These institutions must guarantee and safeguard fundamental rights and freedoms. The "democratic compass" of the participants is central to this training. Effective, open and democratic institutions that observe and fulfill the social contract with citizens are a strong antidote to populism. In this training we not only look at international standards (the role of the Venice Commission and the Council of Europe), but also at practice: we look at the pillars of the democratic constitutional state and the relationship between the various institutions (executive, legislative and supervisory power). We will also discuss the role of civil society and media, as well as concepts and tools for participatory policy making and inclusive governance. We pay attention to (the process of) elections, the rights of citizens (such as appeal and objection options) and the obligations of the government, such as open government and accountability.

Objectives

The training programme aims to provide participants with an overview of concepts, and policies that they can use within their area of expertise and how these can be set in motion and successfully implemented. The focus is on practical implementation. Presentations on the Dutch approach encourage the participants to reflect on the situation in their own country, to identify areas for reform and additionally nurture exchange on practices in each other's countries. In skill sessions, participants will develop their presentation, teamwork and change management skills. While developing and presenting a Back Home Action Plan, they will put these skills into practice. Ultimately, knowledge and skills of participants are improved and networks for the exchange of best practices created.

Approach and structure

By being demand-driven in nature and by stimulating active participation, the training programme strives to achieve lasting results. When participants complete the training, they are sufficiently equipped to implement the newly gained knowledge and insights in their respective organisations. The online training programme offers a careful balance between theory and practice. The in-person part of the programme allows for further deepening of skills and knowledge and for networking. The in-person programme enables participants to learn from and to become acquainted with leading (Dutch and international) academics and professionals. Furthermore, it enables discussion between Dutch and EU practitioners and institutions in this field. Exchanging and comparing experiences is a key aspect of the programme.

Upon successful completion of the programme – which includes attendance to all components of the programme – participants will receive a certificate and become part of the Matra Rule of Law Training Programme alumni network.
